Why do we need each other so much? Why is change so hard, even when we want it? How does grief move, and what helps? This book explains how people work, in plain words and with everyday examples. It covers belonging and trust, habits and change, loss and big life changes, minds that work differently (autism, ADHD, sensory and learning differences), worry and low mood, and the pull of the groups we belong to. It ends with an afterword that draws the threads of the whole series together. Each chapter has words you could use, common mix-ups and something small to try, for anyone, in any kind of relationship. Where a chapter touches hard things, it says where to find help. Read it in order, or start wherever you need it today.
